

Bullying Policy & Legislation

As incidents of bullying receive national attention, provincial and territorial governments are urged to take action. In many cases, that has already been done. However, the different legislation and policy initiatives can be confusing. Each province and territory defines bullying differently and all have their own legislation or policies to address the issue. To clarify this, PREVNet has developed a web page with an interactive map that outlines legislation and policy in each province and territory, as well as the rights and responsibilities of parents and educators.

We'd also like to point out that these summaries were prepared by PREVNet and reviewed by senior law students. They present our current understanding of the legislation in each province and territory, and are intended to provide guidance but not legal advice for parents and educators. We welcome feedback and will update these summaries as more information becomes available, or as new legislation is enacted.

Please visit the web page to find out more.

Back to "In this issue"